Huge amounts of billowing white smoke from burning oil within the exhaust system due to failed turbo seals. (engine oil is pushed at high pressure past the turbo seals directly into the exhaust system and intake tract) This smoke in the early stages of failure may appear as a slight 'whispering' of white exhaust output, usually coinciding with some oil marking or dotting on the rear doors, almost like someone has flicked oil from a brush.

Sprinter CDI power steering fault. I have had two CDI Sprinters, a 311 and a 313.

Both have suffered the same fault. The first was standing for a few months awaiting an engine change. The steering was perfect before and when collected it was very variable and lumpy. It would be light for a while and then going extremely heavy. I replaced the pump, still the same and then replaced the power ...
