sublimation in this way: Sublimation—the unconscious mental process by which instinctual, socially unacceptable energy or libido is transferred to a non-instinctual, socially acceptable activity, e.g., Freud believed that the sublimation of unsatisfied libido was behind the creation of great art and literature.¹

Freud's Idea of Sublimation SAMPLE

In fact, sublimation is opposite to repression and is a vital mechanism maintaining a psychological balance in an individual as the amount of expression of sexual drives and erotic energy is limited. Sublimation presupposes redirection of sexual drives that lead human existence and activity from their initial goals like reproduction and pleasure to nonsexual and socially acceptable ones (Hall).

Freud on Sublimation - Three Components of the Human's ...

In Freud's work, sublimation is a process in which the libido is channelled into apparently non-sexual activities such as artistic creation and intellectual work. Sublimation thus functions as a socially acceptable escape valve for excess sexual energy which would otherwise have to be discharged in socially unacceptable forms (perverse behavior) or in neurotic symptoms .
