Intuitively the answer seems quite obvious. If the dreadful event is caused by the external forces of nature, it is a misfortune and we must resign ourselves to our suffering. Should, however, some ill-intentioned agent, human or supernatural, have brought it about, then it is an injustice and we may express indignation and outrage.

The Faces of Injustice on JSTOR

How can we distinguish between injustice and misfortune? What can we learn from the victims of calamity about the sense of injustice they harbor? In this book a distinguished political theorist ponders these and other questions and formulates a new political and moral theory of injustice that encompasses not only deliberate acts of cruelty or unfairness but also indifference to such acts.

The Faces of Injustice - De Gruyter

Shklar's The Faces of Injustice reproduces two pictures by Giotto from the Arena Chapel in Padua. One is of Justice and portrays "a calm and majestic woman" (p. 103). The other is of Injustice, represented by "a male profile...cold and cruel with small, fanglike teeth at the sides of the mouth" (p. 46). Injustice wears a judge's or ruler's cap backward and carries a "nasty pruning hook".

[OPINION] Courage in the face of injustice

This very point seemed provocative when it was made by the late political theorist Judith Shklar in her "Faces of Injustice" (Yale University Press, 1990), collected from her Storrs Lectures of 1988. This short book is a favorite of mine to re-read, and it seems more prophetic every time I read it, though to many residents of New Orleans it would seem uncontroversial.

Do not be conquered by evil, but conquer evil with good” (Rom. 12:19-21). In the face of injustice, we don’t roll over and resign ourselves to doing nothing. We work for justice—but we don’t work for vengeance. Our human mode of vengeance only fuels the fire and stirs up retaliatory vengeance from others.

In the face of egregious, enduring evil, anger is required of the Christian. Yet we are to be angry and not sin. Surely the many thousands of protesters who are marching and shouting slogans without attacking police officers or destroying property or looting stores are being angry without sinning. Many of them are not Christians.
