The Genius of Birds
highlights new findings and discoveries in the field of bird
intelligence. The book explores birds as thinkers (contrary to the cliché " bird brain
") in the context of
observed behavior in the wild and brings to it the scientific findings from lab and field research. New research suggests that some birds, such as those in the family corvidae,
can rival primates and
even humans in forms of intelligence.

Crows and other corvids have gotten all the good publicity related to bird intelligence in recent years, but Ackerman, who does allow that some birds are brighter than others, points favorably to the much-despised pigeon as an animal that “can remember hundreds of different objects for long periods of time, discriminate between different painting styles, and figure out where it’s going, even when displaced from familiar territory by hundreds of miles.”
