It is the appearance of new emergence holes and the dust (frass) that falls from them that often indicates the presence of an active infestation of woodworm. The woodworm beetle is significant because given the right conditions it can infest a wide variety of timber products including structural building timbers, furniture and wooden ornaments.

Insect Infestation - Property Care

They also emerge in a 'flight season', which in the case of CFB is May to September or thereabouts (our central heating has screwed with their body clocks a bit). The emergence holes are known as 'flight holes'. Clearly this is because the beetles can fly and in making the holes that is the thing they will tend to do.

Is that woodworm active? The answer's in Yorkshire | Brick ...

Reports have been made since the mid-1990s, both in the medical press and national newspapers, of the reemergence of infestations of the Common bed bug (Cimex lectularius) in many developed countries (Paul and Bates, 2000; Boase, 2001; Vandam, 2003; Hall and Yapp, 2004; Cleary and Buchanan, 2004). Previously, this species has been so rare in the U.K., that individual sightings have been considered worthy of publication (George, 1988).
