Differential Geometry and Topology Courses Differential geometry and topology concerns the study of the shapes of spaces, in particular manifolds, and the study of calculus on manifolds. There are deep connections to both algebra (e.g. via geometric group theory) and algebraic geometry (e.g. via the study of complex manifolds).

BLUMBERG, ANDREW J - Mathematics - CNS Directory

The basic method of algebraic topology is to assign an algebraic system (say, a group or a ring) to each topological space in such a way that homeomorphic spaces have isomorphic systems. Geometrical problems about spaces can then be solved by "pushing" them into algebra and doing computations there. This idea can be illustrated by the theory of fundamental group which is familiar from the Topology III course.
