Of this film, Beth knew nothing but its title, No Time to Wave Goodbye. In her good moments, it seemed almost a private message from her older son. Her own first photo book-a series of black-and-white shots of her own children walking away from her, dragging fishing poles, hurrying toward the blooming pagoda of a fireworks display, each underlined with a tender quotation-was called Wave Goodbye.

She wonders if pulling his family back into the black era following his brother's disappearance is some kind of retribution from Vincent for the years of grief-fueled poor parenting he received.
