Introduction To Process

Geomorphology

Prior to 1950, coastal geomorphology was highly descriptive and much of it was influenced by concepts related to the Davisian Cycle of Erosion. Coastal classification and description paid considerable attention to the effects of sea level change and especially the role of the Holocene sea level rise in producing drowned coastal features such as fjords (drowned glaciated valleys) and rias (drowned river valleys).

Definition: (Geo, G. the Earth; Morph, G. Form, ology G. the science of) Geomorphology is the study of landscapes--It entails the systematic description of landforms and the analysis of the processes that create them.

Geomorphologists are also concerned with understanding the function landforms and how landforms respond to changes in energy. Because landforms and landscapes result from the combined effects of lithology, structure, and process, geomorphology draws upon nearly all fields of ...

Introduction To Process Geomorphology

- It is a process of change in the physical structure of rock as a result of long-term heat, pressure and introduction of chemically active fluids, especially a change that increases the rock's hardness and crystalline structure. • The change occurs primarily due to heat, pressure, and the introduction of chemically active fluids.

Introduction to Geomorphology (2nd Lec.).ppt - 2nd Lecture ...

Introduction to Coastal Processes and Geomorphology begins by discussing coastal systems and shows how these systems link to the processes examined in detail throughout the book. These include the morphodynamic paradigm, tides, waves and sediment transport.
