Crystallization of fats and oils. Control of crystallization of Fats and Oils is important in many food products, including margarine, chocolate, butter, and shortenings. In these products, the aim is to produce the appropriate number and size distribution of fat crystals in the correct polymorphic form (i.e. type of crystal) because this solid fat crystalline phase plays a large role in the product properties as appearance, texture, spreadability, and functionality.

It will also include methodologies for designing and selecting crystallization equipment taking into account the crystallization process involved and the properties of the crystals formed. Specific case studies will include product quality, texture, and stability of crystals in plastic fats, dairy, confectionery, frozen foods, and baked goods.

Crystallization Processes and Applications in Food Products

Abstract Fatty acid crystallization is a complex process initiated by super cooling leading to nucleation and subsequent crystal growth. Each of these stages is greatly influenced by heat Crystallization processes are rarely, if ever, completely growth dominated. Some degree of nucleation and attrition almost always occurs in order to develop an effective seeded crystallization. As this example demonstrates, real-time microscopy offers a unique opportunity to better understand seeding events.
