The key appears to be that speech sounds are those sounds used by a particular world language to form the words of that language. We recognize /b/ as an English speech sound because we can find examples of it appearing in the words of English. In comparison, most speakers of English would not recognize a dental click as an English speech sound. This is a sound made by sucking on the front teeth with the tongue, rather like the tutting sound made in (British) English to express disapproval ...
