Under-occupied developments in China are mostly unoccupied property developments in China, and commonly referred to as "ghost cities" or "ghost towns". The phenomenon was observed and recorded as early as 2006 by writer Wade Shepard, and subsequently reported by news media over the decades, often cast in a negative light. News stories around the topic have been criticized as hasty judgments.

Kangbashi, for example, has around 100,000 inhabitants today. Although it was originally designed to hold 500,000 and does feel rather empty at times, you can hardly call a city with 100,000 people living in it a ghost city! The population of the so-called ghost cities is starting to increase. Established in 1993 and located east of the Huangpu River, Pudong is probably the most successful example of a former ghost city.
