The family study, which includes typing of the proband's mother, father, and all full siblings, provides an internal verification of the patient's HLA haplotypes. Because HLA genes segregate in classic Mendelian fashion, the probability that a sibling inherits the same parental haplotypes is 25% (genotypically identical). The probability that a sibling inherits one identical paternal or maternal haplotype plus one nonshared haplotype is 50% (haploidentical).
