Many preppers select the coldest room in the house, like the basement or attic as their prepper pantry so that even in the event of a blackout, their supplies can still remain relatively cool. It's also an advantage if your pantry space can accommodate shelves to make organization a whole lot easier and more efficient. Here's a quick and easy tutorial on how to create a great shelving system for your prepper pantry:

Deep pantry survival food is not something that you purchase. If another prepper would look into my pantry they would be surprised. Yes, there is purchased food for short time period useage but deep pantry is for real long time periods. Deep pantry food for me is defined as food that is replaceable when you can no longer buy food.

Survival Food Most Common In Preppers Deep Pantry Storage

Survivalists and Preppers are both determined and well-trained individuals who don't require outside help to survive a major disaster. However, the differences between them are significant: A survivalist can live off the land. A Prepper lives off their stockpile and homestead. A survivalist does not require creature comforts.
