In the classroom Affective factors may be as important for successful language learning, if not more so, than ability to learn. Teachers can reduce negative factors and develop positive ones by doing activities to build a positive group dynamic, by including students in deciding aspects of the course and choosing activities that are motivating for the age and interests of the learners.

The article examines the influence of affective factors on classroom learning. Different patterns of intellect, motivation, personality and environment may result in productive thinking. Some of the factors affecting teacher-learning processes include learner characteristics, teacher characteristics, learner and teacher behaviors, group characteristics and physical characteristics of the behavioral setting.

Affective Factors Influence Classroom Learning

Creating classroom environments that act intentionally to lower the affective filter will increase language development. The lower the filter, the more input is allowed to pass through. Students who are highly motivated, feel confident, and feel safe are more open to input. Let's picture two classrooms:
