This is the vision with which George Steiner opens his new meditation, Real Presences. His subtitle - 'Is there anything in what we say?' - indicates the motivation for this dream of immanence: the desire to reinstate the belief that meaning resides in the artwork and the need to recover from deconstructive relativism and indeterminacy. For Steiner, God is the premise upon which speech is based, and the wager on meaning and understanding - which we all undertake in experiencing art ...
