The cave shook. The pen could no longer be held steady. Bigger rocks fell from the cavern's ceiling. There was no more time. A new dragon ruler would be crowned. The mountains quivered. The fight was mighty. The cavern did not hold. The scribe was not afraid. He had always known this would be his fate. He was a scribe. He was a prophet.

Sixteen year old Drastona "Stone" is branded a scribe, a user of magic, and she is sentenced to die. Kye helps her escape so she can use hr magic to help others. The writing is good and the mistakes are few. The characters are well fleshed out. The plot is 'old hat' with the evil oppressive king and the opposition working together to depose him.

The Mark of the Mage tells the story of Stone, illegitimate daughter of a high ranking noble who has lost favour with the evil king. She's a scribe in a time when knowledge is made suspect. There are echoes here of the terror of reigns like that of the Khmer Rouge but the reader isn't lost without familiarity with such parallels.
