Psychology of Intelligence Analysis is one of those rare books which over-delivers what its title suggests. A more appropriate title would have been Psychology of Analysis, because so many of the topics discussed in this book transcend the field of national intelligence. IMHO, chapters of this book should be required reading for all freshmen in all colleges.

In the real world, intelligence analysts use data from diverse sources. They frequently make nonnumerical forecasts that are vague and hard to score for accuracy, so feedback is often absent. Intelligence analysts shift their response thresholds depending on the cost of the errors. That is, they are likelier to say "signal" when the costs of a miss are high, and they are likelier to say "noise" when the costs of a false alarm are high.

The Psychology of Intelligence Analysis: Drivers of ...

Intelligence analysis is fundamentally a mental process, but understanding this process is hindered by the lack of conscious awareness of the workings of our own minds. A basic finding of cognitive psychology is that people have no conscious experience of most of what happens in the human mind.

Chapter 1 — Central Intelligence Agency

The process of analysis itself reinforces this natural function of the human brain. Analysis usually involves creating models, even though they may not be labeled as such. We set forth certain understandings and expectations about cause-and-effect relationships and then process and interpret information through these models or filters.

of - Central Intelligence Agency

Intelligence analysts may be less influenced than others by the availability bias. Analysts are evaluating all available information, not making quick and easy inferences. On the other hand, policymakers and journalists who lack the time or access to evidence to go into details must necessarily take shortcuts.

Chapter 12 — Central Intelligence Agency

The articles are based on reviewing cognitive psychology literature concerning how people process information to make judgments on incomplete and ambiguous information. Richard Heur has selected the experiments and findings that seem most relevant to intelligence analysis and most in need of communication to intelligence analysts.
