The Mirror of the World is a 1918 German silent film directed by Lupu Pick and starring Adolf Klein, Fritz Richard and Gertrude Welcker. It was the directoral debut of Pick who had been a prominent actor of the 1910s but had set up his own production company Rex-Film to take advantage of the booming German film industry. It was shot in Berlin. The film's art direction was by Hans Neirath.

The Mirror of the World - Wikipedia

Every particle of the world is a mirror, In each atom lies the blazing light of a thousand suns. Cleave the heart of a raindrop, a hundred pure oceans will flow forth. Look closely at a grain of sand, The seed of a thousand beings can be seen. The foot of an ant is larger than an elephant; In essence, a drop of water is no different than the Nile.

It covers major world art, including Western art but also many other world regions. The illustrations are extraordinary, even by art book standards. The crystal-clear pictures of the Chauvet cave drawings early in the book are an early sign of the visual pleasures to come later. The writing, too, is extraordinary.

A mirror world is a representation of the real world in digital form. It attempts to map real-world structures in a geographically accurate way. Mirror worlds offer a utilitarian software model of real human environments and their workings. The term differs from virtual worlds in that these have no direct connections to real models and thus are described as fictions, while mirror worlds are connected to real models and lie nearer to non-fiction.
