Life Cycle Assessments (LCA) and Carbon Footprints are research methods to gain insight in the full life cycle of a product. It quantifies all inputs and outputs. This means all phases of a product are taken into account and analysed, from raw materials, packaging, transport, retail and consumer towards disposal or recycling.

Agri-footprint - Life Cycle Assessments & Carbon Footprints
A life cycle assessment systematically evaluates multiple environmental impacts of a product, activity, or process over its entire life cycle. Carbon footprint analysis is actually a subset of a complete life cycle assessment of a product, activity, or process. The core standards around LCA are ISO 14044 and ISO 14040.

Comparing Carbon Footprint and Life Cycle Analyses
Carbon Footprint. A total product carbon footprint is a measure of the direct and indirect greenhouse gas (GHG) emissions associated with all activities in the product's life cycle. Products are both goods and services. Such a carbon footprint can be calculated by performing (according to international standards) a LCA that concentrates on GHG emissions that have an effect on climate change.

Measurement of life-cycle greenhouse gas emissions involves calculating the global-warming potential of energy sources through life-cycle assessment. These are usually sources of only electrical energy but sometimes sources of heat are evaluated. The findings are presented in units of global warming potential per unit of electrical energy generated by that source. The scale uses the global warming potential unit, the carbon dioxide equivalent, and the unit of electrical energy, the kilowatt hour
