In linguistics, grammatical relations are functional relationships between constituents in a clause. The standard examples of grammatical functions from traditional grammar are subject, direct object, and indirect object. In recent times, the syntactic functions, typified by the traditional categories of subject and object, have assumed an important role in linguistic theorizing, within a variety of approaches ranging from generative grammar to functional and cognitive theories. Grammatical Relations Grammatical Relations (GRs) are relations between words in sentences. These are much more clearly defined than semantic roles, since they involve human interaction with communicated content. Because our minds are finite, we must always "carve out" (i.e., create) bounded categories from inherently unbounded semantic space.
