When announced at the London Motor Show in 1970, the Cortina Mk3 took the opposition completely by surprise. The only hope for the opposition was that Ford had misjudged the market and made the Cortina too big (as BMC had done with the 1800) – and initially it looked as if they were right. In the months following the launch, sales were slow, and disrupted by industrial action, as well as initial problems with the suspension settings and overall levels of noise, vibration and harshness (or ...

The Mk3 Cortina's Detroit-inspired 'Coke bottle' design might have still been bang on trend when launched in 1970, but after several years of sustained success at the top of the sales charts, buyers were no longer as refreshed. In 1976 the Mk3 was narrowly knocked off the top step for the first time in half a decade, but by then Ford had already dusted off its straight edge to sharpen things up again.
