In “Structure, Sign, and Play in the Discourse of the Human Sciences”, Derrida talks about how every structure needs to have some kind of center; it is the thing that keeps the structure together and holds it up. He claims that “even today the notion of a structure lacking any center represents the unthinkable itself”.

Structure, Sign, and Play by Jacques Derrida

Structure, Sign, and Play: Derrida Structure, Sign, and Play The essay “Structure, Sign and Play” begins with an attempt to find perhaps “something has occurred in the history of the concept of structure that could be called an event" and asks the question "what would this event be then?" and, "Where the structure does occur?"

Structuralism picks up on this at the level of the sign (the signified—that locus of the concept and thus of truth; and the signifier—that locus of differences, substitutions and play.) The main section of "Structure, Sign and Play," is concerned with the trouble that Levi-Strauss gets into when trying simultaneously to operate with scientific principles (empiricism) and those that confirm the " structuration " principles typical of Nietzsche, Heidegger and Freud (bricolage).
