Convection Currents - Weebly

The convection currents happen down in the mantle. Our continents and plates are dragged along on top as the mantle stuff moves underneath. When two plates rub against each other there is an earthquake. When one plate gets pulled under another bits of it melt and push their way back to the surface - that's a volcano.

Convection Currents - Haiti

Convection currents occur when pockets of cool matter sink, as they are less dense, whilst pockets of warm matter rise as they are denser. Convection is the movement of molecules within fluids.
