Depression is one of the most common mental health problems facing people with chronic pain. It often makes someone's other medicalconditions and treatment more complicated. Consider these statistics:

Depression and Chronic Pain: Causes and Treatments

Because chronic depression lasts longer and tends to be more severe than episodic depression, treatment is more intensive. Relapse is also a challenge. About half of patients with chronic depression who respond to treatment (whether with antidepressants, psychotherapy, or a combination of the two) will suffer a relapse within one to two years if they stop treatment.
